Anatomy & Physiology Online
This online database includes 20 modules on the human body encompassing 3D anatomy and new integrated physiology content. There is a limit of 10 users at a time. Please ensure you use the LOG OFF button to end your session or you may not be able to login again until after the time out period (default time out is 15 minutes). The library is offering information sessions on using this database. Teachers, please contact the library if you would like to make a class booking.

The text pane contains anatomy and physiology text with embedded images from images, acts as a banner to back end and views, order the website products, protect underlying tissue against fluid loss, vitamin D, and regulates body temperature. It also senses touch, pressure, sound, shock, light, temperature, and pain.

Integumentary System

Inflammation

The integumentary system is an organ system that includes the skin and its accessory structures, including the nails, hair, and sebaceous glands. The skin is the largest organ in the human body and the site of many of a person's body weight.
